

Pictorial Coverage of Gay Paris

THE EIFFEL TOWER under Paris skies looms high above the gay and enchanting city. The tower is built of skeletal iron and stands a total of 984 feet tall. It was constructed in 1889 for the World's Fair and still reminds Parisians of that era. The view from the top is not possible to put into words; one has to see it. Delicious full-course meals are also served in the tower itself for an added attraction of dining almost in the clouds.

PARIS, the capital of France, is also the capital of the world to many people. Inexhaustible, the city can truly claim to be all things to all men. Above is a view from the Eiffel Tower of the magical river Seine. The Seine snakes its way through the heart of Paris and is used for such pleasures as boating and sunbathing.

The Last Time David's Camera Saw Paris . . .

David Ranns, who recently joined The Press as a photographer, spent last summer in Europe. While there, like all good photographers, David poked his camera into all sorts of places.

One of the places was Paris.

Shares Views

On this page David shares with the readers of The Press some of the views he saw while in the old capital of France.

There are many familiar views.

There perhaps are some that are not so familiar to our readers.

But they all have interest

if only to show that the world is getting smaller as the years go by and more and more people from Torrance are visiting Paris and the other age-old cities of Europe.

Move Along

In the future, week after week in The Press, the camera of David Ranns and the other picture-takers of this newspaper will continue to bring readers the more familiar views of Torrance and the South area.

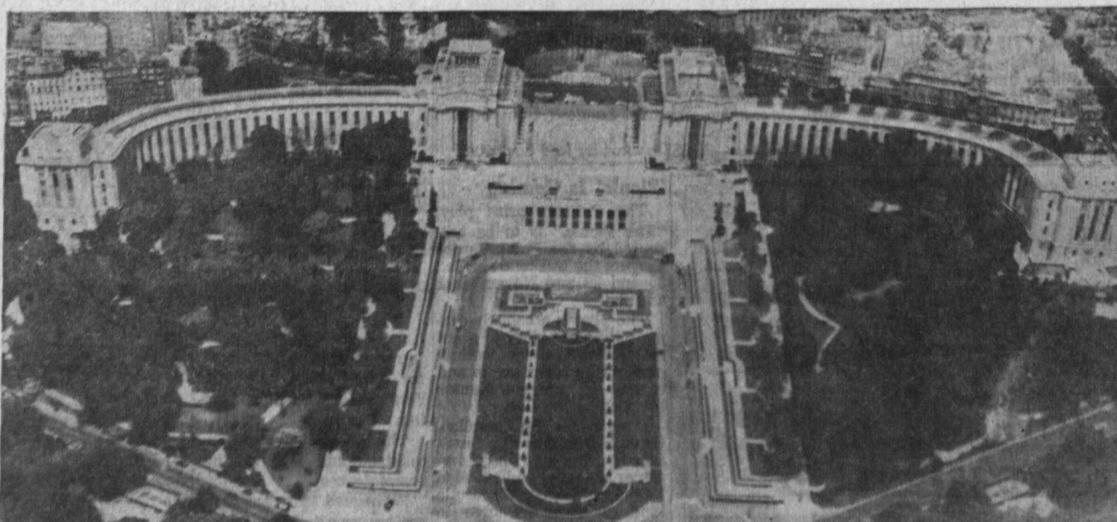

Our pictures don't move, but our photographers do. You can move along with them simply by reading The Press each Wednesday and Friday.

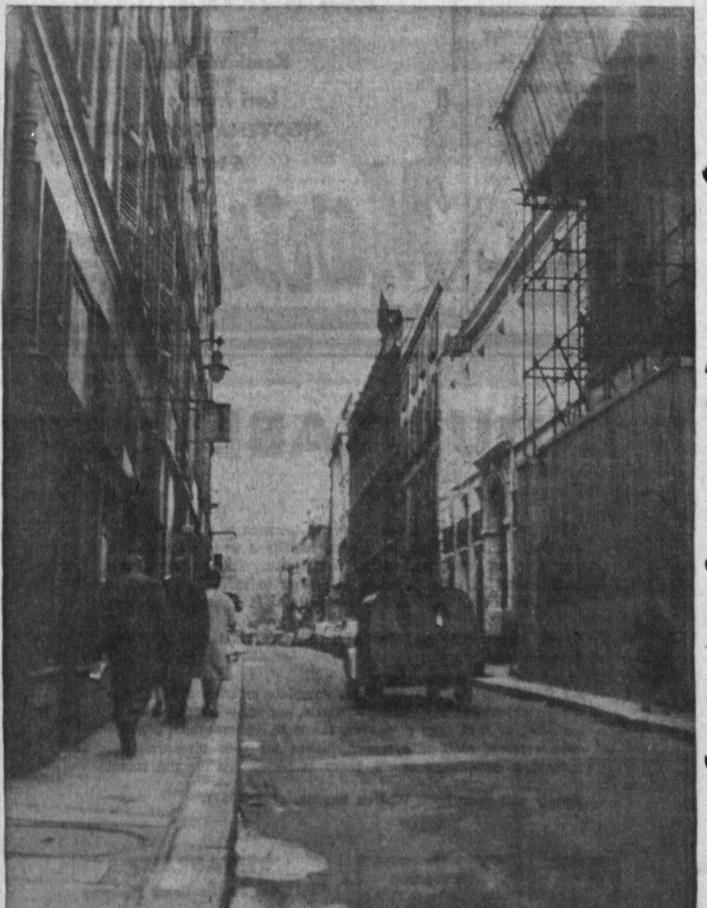

ARTISTS in Montmartre display their art on the sidewalks. Passersby look over the various paintings and sometimes pose on the spot for students. Tourists from all over the world can be found in this area of Paris.

MONTMARTRE, a hillside provincial village within the city of Paris, has two reputations: a noisy night-club center where fashionable revelers dance 'til dawn; and a sanctuary for poor students dreaming of art, poetry and success. This artist adds the finishing touches to his work.

QUIET street on the Left Bank where Sorbonne dominates the district today. Its students, their bookshops, hotels and favorite cafes are the life of this section.
